(Extract) PEKING, June 25th 1863.

The British Minister having represented that the three months term is too short, the Prince now substitutes for that term the term of twelve months for the future, therefore, in the case of all produce. For the future, therefore, in the case of all produce, merchants may carry down the great River to Shanghai, notice being given that the samels intended for Exportation, if the same produce be indeed exported within the twelve months, the marks, packages, amounts and weights being found by the Customs to correspond with those originally entered in the books, the equivalent of the half duty paid thereon shall be refunded to the merchant in a form of a drawback certificate The Prince is writing the Ministers Superintendent of Trade to send orders to the above effect to the different custom Houses under their control.

IMPARTIAL, NOT NEUTRAL.

SHANGHAI, SATURDAY 18 JULY 1863

IT is with the deepest regret that, at the moment of going to press, we find ourselves called on to record the death from cholera of D. A. C. G. Cookesley; which took place at Quinsan on the 16th instant, after only eleven hours illness. Mr. Cookesley entered the commissariat in 1854, and served during the whole Chinese war, in which he distinguished himself as an active, energetic officer. He also served through the campaign in the North of China, and certainly there kept up his previous reputation. His duties since he joined the Disciplined Chinese have been most arduous, and his loss will be much felt by all connected with the Force, whether officially or privately.

THE provisions of the new Burmese treaty, which we publish in another column, are far more satisfactory than we were led to suppose by the summary which the Calcutta Englishman laid before its readers some six months ago, at the time Col. Phayre arrived at that city from the court of Mondalay, as reliable; and on which we commented in February last. From that summary, it appeared that the only concession we had gained was the recognition of a Commercial Agent at the Burmese capital; while, to secure this somewhat shadowy advantage, we had surrendered our frontier dues, but allowed the King to retain his. Either the information which first cropped out must have been strangely incorrect, or the treaty must have undergone considerable alteration before the ratifications were exchanged. Judging from the tenour of some remarks which Lord Elgin made in Council, and from the fact that a rumour was current in Calcutta that Col. Phayre had been desired to have certain alterations effected, we hazard a surmise that the latter may have been the case. His Lordship said, "the present engagement is hardly sufficiently comprehensive to be called a Commercial treaty; though it is, without doubt, a step towards the development of trade by opening up an intercourse, not only between British Burmah and Burmah Proper, but by opening up a similar communication between British Burmah and Burmah Proper and the states on the south west frontier of China." These remarks would certainly not have been applicable to the present treaty, which is essentially commercial in the greater part of its provisions; and the strictures which were passed by the Indian journals, at the time, on its assumed terms would have been equally undeserved. It would be impossible to draw up a treaty which should affect both the contracting parties more equally. Goods arriving from abroad at Rangoon will only be liable to an import of one per cent ad valorem, if declared to be for export to British Burmah, and bulk be not broken, and the same rule will affect goods arriving from Burmah and declared to be for export to any foreign country. British Merchants are to be allowed to trade, to possess land and to erect houses of business in any part of the Burmese territory; and Burmese subjects will enjoy similar privileges in British territory. The inhabitants of whatever country who may wish to cross the Burmese frontier, whether from British into Burmese, or from Burmese into British territory, are to be allowed to do so without hindrance, from either the British or Burmese ruler. An advantage is accorded to Burmah by the Schedule of Customs duties to be charged, which are to be four per cent higher on foreign goods imported into Burmah than on Burmese goods passing into British territory. Article 8, which provide that the king of Burmah shall abolish the duties he is now empowered to charge "if so inclined, after one, two, three or four years," is simply nonsense. If he were inclined to abolish them, he could do so, whether the treaty suggested that he might do so or not. It remains to be seen whether the concessions thus made on paper, will be given effect to in practice, and nothing has transpired to affect the opinion we expressed in this respect on a previous occasion. We would gladly think that the formal consent of her monarch was all that was necessary to induce Burmah to throw wide her gates for the influx of foreign trade; but hitherto they have been as jealously guarded as ever were those of China and Japan. The overt opposition of the former to the advent of foreigner has at length been overcome; in Japan the match has been laid to the train of events which are to bring about a similar result; but in Burmah, we are yet at the first stage; and only the friendliness of the reigning monarch gives room for hope that the sequence will be different from that in other countries where a similar policy prevailed. But the instability of his seat on the throne renders this hope a very precarious one. A report was current in Calcutta at the time the last mail left, that he had been murdered by his brother, who, by Burmese law, stands next in succession to the throne. This prince is known to be strongly inimical to foreigners, and is by no means unlikely to have taken advantage of the anger that would be felt by his own party, at the conclusion of a treaty giving them free ingress into and egress from the country, to remove its principal supporter. Disagreement has also sprung up between this prince and his nephew—the second son of the reigning King, who first fled into our territory for protection, and afterwards sought refuge among the Shans, where rumour says he is not unlikely to raise the standard of rebellion. He dares not again be seen in Mandalay, as the penalty for his flight is death. Thus the horizon in the direction of Burmah looks stormy, notwithstanding the amicable nature of the treaty which has been concluded: the accession of the present heir-apparent will certainly be the signal for an attempt to withdraw the privileges that have just been conceded to foreigners, and such an attempt would certainly be the signal for coercive measures, to check it. A contest for the throne, originated in the independent Shan states, would also not unlikely call for our interference; disturbance in one of these hill districts invariably spreads an uneasy feeling through the adjoining ones; an outbreak in the Shan states would be the certain signal for disturbances among the hill tribes of Assam, and it would therefore be our interest to settle the dispute at the outset. Thus, however satisfactory may be the terms of the treaty, and however admirable a basis it may be, on which to develop our future relations with Burmah, we fear the immediate advantages to be derived from it will be slight.

THE CHINESE LANGUAGE.

1.—新字認法

THE ANALYTICAL READER, A SHORT METHOD for learning to Read and Write CHINESE. By the Rev. W. A. P. MARTIN, D.D. Shanghai Presbyterian Missio Press, 1863.

2.—TWO LISTS OF SELECTED CHARACTERS, containing all in the Bible and Twenty Seven other books, with Introductory Remarks. By WILLIAM GAMBLE. Shanghai, Presbyterian Mission Press 1861.

THERE is no Royal Road to learning; yet whatever aids are afforded to us by the talents or perseverance of scholars may without scruple be availed of. The acquisition of the Chinese language has for long been considered a task so stupendous, that its difficulty has become proverbial. Gutzlaff went so far as to assert half jokingly that the Father of Error himself must have invented Chinese in order to keep the Gospel out of China. Yet the book which Doctor Martin has just published, professes to open up a new road to the hitherto all but unattainable goal, and, so far as we can judge, there is little doubt but that, with this book and a tolerably intelligent teacher, the acquisition of a practical knowledge of Chinese will become the work of months instead of, as at present, being the weary labour of years.

Our readers are no doubt already acquainted with the fact that in learning Chinese thoroughly, several difficulties unknown to Western languages, present themselves. In the first place the colloquial is one language, the written language another. A perfect knowledge of the character, and acquaintance with the style used in the classics, will not render the student capable of telling his groom to saddle his horse and bring it round to the door. He will likewise be unable to understand such a book as the Hung-Lou Méng, (Dream of the Red Chamber) or any other work written in the colloquial style. Doctor Martin addresses himself altogether to the written language. He calls his book Jên-tzu-hs n-ja. "A New Method of becoming acquainted with the Written Character." It is therefore to those who desire to explore the riches of Chinese literature, that this book will be valuable.

Before entering on a sketch of the plan of the work, it is necessary to impress on our readers, most of whom are engaged in commercial pursuits, the importance of being able to check translations given by English-speaking Natives. It is notorious that the compradores of the great houses in China, are enormously wealthy, and it stands to reason that the greater portion of their wealth is obtained at the expense of their employers. Were every Chinese document submitted to the scrutinising eye of a competent European, our compradore friends would experience many a slip betwixt the cup and the lip. Now, however, we are helplessly dependant. We are forced to accept as gospel, whatever translation of a conversation or a document our compradore may be disposed to give us, and it would be indeed difficult to enumerate the many advantages which may accrue to him by giving a false version. The Analytical Reader undertakes to remedy all this, by enabling every one to acquire at least the rudiments of the language, and we have no doubt but that when we explain the principle on which it is founded, our readers will confess that it is admirably adapted to the end in view.

Whoever has attempted to learn the Chinese written language, must have noticed that certain characters, such as 不. 能, 和, &c., occur much oftener than others—that, in other words, out of, say, 1,000 characters taken at random from a Chinese work, the majority would be repetitions of the members of a group such as we have given an example of above. It follows from this that if a student acquaint himself with all the members of that group, he will find that the majority of the characters in any Chinese work are already familiar to him. The discovery of this important principle is due to Mr. William Gamble of the American Presbyterian Mission Press. This gentleman, when about to cast a fount of Chinese type, found it necessary to ascertain what characters were the most important, and occurred with the greatest frequency. Could he discover this fact, he would not only save a vast amount of type metal, which would otherwise be used for useless characters, but he would also be enabled to arrange the composing desks in such a manner, that a compositor would always have next his hand the type most in use. Both these objects have been attained. An examination was made of 4,160 octavo pages, containing characters to the number of a million and a quarter. It appears almost incredible, yet it is perfectly true that out of this enormous aggregate there were but 5,150 different characters. Here we have at once a wonderful simplification. Mr. Gamble went further. Having found how many different characters he wanted, the next question was how to arrange them. To this end, he separated them into fifteen groups, viz—

1	Those occurring more than		10,000	times.
2	„ „	from 1,000 to	10,000	„
3-11	„ „	„ 100 to	1,000	„
		&c. &c.	&c.	&c.
12	„ „	75 to	100	„
13	„ „	50 to	75	„
14	„ „	25 to	50	„
15	„ „	1 to	25	„

The result of this investigation shewed that 521 characters included nine-elevenths of the whole number used. Hence any student who has mastered these 521 characters will be in a position to read with tolerable ease, and with but little reference to the Dictionary or Teacher, any work in the same style as the Translation of the Bible, and the different religious publications issued by the Missionaries. The only difficulty is to pitch upon the right characters to select for study, and this Mr. Gamble has obviated by publishing the result of his researches. Whoever therefore desires to see a monument of human perseverance, and at the same time to possess a work which has opened a new era in the history of Chinese educational works, will do well to purchase the little book whose name stands second at the head of this Review.

It may be thought that the selection of characters should have been made from the Chinese classical authors, rather than from works published by the Missionaries themselves. In answer to this objection, we may state that the publications of the society are supervised by the most competent native literates, so that the Bible and the Tracts issued are fair specimens of the classical style. In the next place, although the discovery made by Mr. Gamble reflects the greatest credit upon him, he has himself availed solely of its practical use in the Mission Printing Office. Although the advantages to be derived directly from the principle he established, are almost incalculable, he esteems the Mission work more valuable than any literary fame which might have accrued to him from extending his investigations into the purely Native literature.

Dr. Martin has taken Mr. Gamble's classification, and has selected two thousand characters which occur with the maximum frequency. A simple calculation will shew that when these two thousand characters are accurately learned, nearly fifty-seven fifty-eighths of all the characters employed in the 4,160 octavo pages examined, will be familiar to the student.

The Frs. Part of Dr. Martin's book (pp. 17) is devoted to an explanation of the system upon which it has been constructed, and of the manner in which it should be used. Part II (pp. 62) comprises the Text and Translation. On one page we have the Chinese arranged in lines of four characters each, and these again grouped into stanzas each of four lines. These will be easily committed to memory, "the association being so much the more powerful," to use the author's own words, "when sense, sound and rhythm are all combined. We have then a threefold cord, not easily broken." The following is an example which will shew our readers who are acquainted with the language, the nature of the plan of the work,

Hwa	neng	i	pai
Meh	mien	ting	liu
Lwe	fan	wau	sheu
Kuh	yung	fuh	yiu *

The flower tender easily wastes.
Wheat in sweeping is certainly retained.
Our race is contrary to birds and beasts,
Which for grain to nourish do not grieve.

Part III. contains the analysis of the two thousand characters to be found in the former portion of the book. Here we find each character split up into its elements. This the author looks on as a spelling book of the language, but we are forced to express our doubts of its utility. In some cases certainly we can spell a character by the aid of its elements, as in the case of Hsing 性 Nature, compounded of 心 Hsin, the heart, and 生 Shêng, to produce, but in the majority of instances, we must trust greatly to imagination, or else give up the experiment in despair. The author founds a system of mnemonics on his analysis, but although the instances he brings forward are well chosen, and the explanation he gives displays considerable ingenuity, we have (and we fear our readers will experience the same disappointment) signally failed in several instances to apply his principle to other characters. We desire to deprecate the wrath of our legal friends before we quote Dr. Martin's analysis of the character 獄 Yü, a law suit. He splits it up into 犬言犬 words between two dogs. Let us hope that if our author gets into a legal scrape in Shanghai, neither Mr. Laurence nor Mr. Cooper will have read either his book or our Review.

Part IV. is a Dictionary or Vocabulary of the two thousand characters used in the earlier part of the work. The meanings given are those of most frequent occurrence, and to sum up, we need only say that the Dictionary and Reader are alike worthy one of the other.

We regret that Doctor Martin has availed himself of the orthography used by Mr. Edkins. Without prejudice to the latter's great talents and requirements as a sinologue, his orthographical system is in all respects inferior to that adopted by Mr Wade in the Hsin Ching Lu When, therefore, we heard that Doctor Martin was about to adopt the Peking pronunciation, we trusted that his work would have been in uniformity with Mr Wade's.

In every respect Doctor Martin's book is most valuable. It is, in fact, the only single book from which a fair knowledge of the Chinese written-language can be obtained.

As far as externals go, it is unexceptionable. It is well printed on good paper. The Table of Corrigenda contains but nine items—in a word it is a pleasant as well as a valuable book to read.

YANG-TSZE REGULATIONS.

We have much pleasure in drawing the attention of our readers to the undernoted dispatch from H. I. H. the Prince of Kung to H. E. Anson Burlinghame, U. S. A. Minister to China. We have in it a proof that the Chinese are compelled to follow in the march of improvement, and gradually rescind those obstructive Regulations which have hitherto hampered our commercial relations. The time allowed (three months) for re-exportation was altogether too limited to admit of full advantage being taken of the markets. Now, however, that merchandize can be re-entered at another port after any lapse of time, not exceeding one year from the date of first shipment, the merchant will have no cause for complaint. These concessions, whether wrung from the Chinese authorities or obtained voluntarily, indicate a tendency to advance, which speaks well for the future prospects of the country.

His Imperial Highness Prince Kung, Chief Secretary of the Chinese Government for Foreign Affairs, herewith replies:—

I have the honor to acknowledge a communication from your Excellency, in which you show that the drawback certificates for half duty on goods stored for re-export should be limited to three months,—a period much too short—but ought to be extended to a full year.

It appears that the merchants who bring native produce down the Yan-tsze-kiang to Shanghai pay full tariff export duty when it leaves its original port, and half duty when it is re-exported to another port. Such produce being duly reported to the customs, when the merchant wishes to send it out of port, pays the half-duty; and if in within three months, he can re-enter it at another port on presentation of the drawback certificate, which is received as valid for the duty

Now, since that in the dispatch under reply, your Excellency observes that the time of three months allowed in the drawback certificates, during which this produce must be re-exported, must be regarded as much too short, I have extended the limit to a year. Therefore after this date, whenever produce brought down the Yang-tsze to Shanghai has been reported to the customs for re-exportation at any time within a year, they shall, on ascertaining that the goods are in their original packages, neither broken open nor abstracted from, and their number and weight correct, and all particulars tally with the original report, grant a drawback certificate for half-duty to be substituted for the former certificate, and delivered to the holder of the goods as evidence of the duty having been paid

I shall inform the Superintendent of commerce respecting this regulation, and instruct him to send orders to the customs' officers for them to act accordingly; and I now likewise send this reply to your Excellency, requesting that you will inform yourself upon the whole subject.

To His Excellency Anson Burlingame.
&c., &c., &c.

June 25th, 1863 (Tangchi, 2d year, 5th Moon, 10th day.)

By a Notification appearing in another column, it will be seen that the same extension of time has been granted to English merchants. There is little but that all the Treaty Powers will eventually participate in the privilege.

SHANGHAI CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

MINUTES of the Annual General Meeting of the Shanghai General Chamber of Commerce held at the Reading Room of the Shanghai Library, July 15th 1863

P. W. BD. Esq., in the Chair.

Present—Messrs. S. Wells, P. B. Johnson, J. Thorne, W. Thorburn, J. Low, H. C. Antrobus, R. R. Westall, A. Michie, and Lemann.

The Chairman opened the business of the Meeting as follows—

GENTLEMEN,—The General Meeting to which you are summoned to day is that usually held each year, for the purpose of passing accounts, electing a fresh Committee and transacting any current business, and resolutions to meet these several requirements will be laid before you

During the year that has just elapsed, the proceedings of the Chamber have been but few; but some of them are of sufficient importance to prevent their being passed over without remark. In the first place, it will be borne in mind, that its constitution has been altered, and having been hitherto exclusively a British Chamber of Commerce, it is now General, and open to all foreign merchants at this Port who may be duly elected. By that henceforth we may be able to address all foreign Governments having Treaties with China, and not be confined by our relations to one only

It will further be remembered that nearly two years ago, a memorial from this Chamber was sent to H B M Foreign secretary regarding the action of the Imperial Maritime Customs in China, and that last September, another was forwarded, referring to what were considered to be infringements of our rights by the Chinese Government The reply to those was received a short time ago, and at once published for the information of the Members. I would now direct your attention not only to the reply itself, but to the policy and course of action of the British Government which it lays down, and which are further and more fully developed by the dispatch published in the Blue Book of January 1863 On reading through these, you will observe the difference in the relative position between foreigners and the Chinese now, and what it was assumed to be on the conclusion of the Treaty of Tientsin. Then we were told that China was opened to foreigners throughout its length and breadth, and the articles establishing the system of Passports, and Transit Duties were triumphantly pointed out as a means of removing the exclusiveness of the natives, and giving free scope to enterprise whether mercantile missionary or scientific Now we learn from Mr Hammond's dispatch "that so far as it is possible for H M's Government to regulate the intercourse of British Subjects with the Chinese Authorities and population, in places beyond Consular control, the one great object "which should steadily be kept in view, especially during the present transitive disturbances "is to diminish by every means in their power "the points of contact between them" The reason for the adoption of this view is given in the next paragraph viz, that "the dispatch "of Mr. Bruce contains ample evidence of the "crimes and collisions which follow such contact" It is to be regretted that the Government and the Minister should confound together the merchants and the low class foreigners in China, more especially as by restraining the former from carrying on an internal trade, they give a practical monopoly to the latter, who alike defy the control of either foreign or Chinese authority

Another very important decision which is enunciated in these despatches, is, that dispute between Merchants and the customs, ipse dixits of the Chinese Superintendent is final and that we are deprived of all right to an appeal by our own authorities, and that our only chance of redress is an appeal to the Minister at Peking; so that one Chinese Official at either of the open Ports, is at liberty to seize, confiscate and pocket the property of a British subject without let or hindrance, further than that the party aggrieved may write to the Minister to get it it back again.

The Chamber advocated a trial on such cases before the Consular Courts or failing that, before a Mixed Tribunal composed of European & Chinese Officials, and although a hope of the creation of a system such a court is held out by Mr. Hammond (who appears to think that the Chamber objected to a mixed Board because it expressed a preference for the Consular) yet from what I heard some little time ago from Sir F Bruce himself, in consideration of his previously expressed opinion in his letter to this Chamber of 23rd Sept. 1861. I still trust he will establish this mixed Tribunal, and save us from the degrading and unfair position of being entirely in the hands of corrupt Chinese officials.

I cannot leave this subject with out referring to a most extraordinary document which appeared in the late Blue-books, viz, a Memorandum by Mr. Lay Chinese Inspector of Customs, on the complaints of the Hankhau and Hongkong Chambers of Commerce. This Memorandum would be of no importance did it not acquire it from the fact that as whole are stated our own authorities will not interfere with the action of the Chinese customs except diplomatically and we learn from this what justice to expect from an established tribunal such as one who can thus write. Not to fill himself to facts and arguments he exhibits the most decided animosity to those who presume to doubt the absolute perfection of the Chinese customs, and to support his own views in opposition to those of the Memorialists, he does not hesitate to distort occurrences and statements with an equal disregard of truth and courtesy. For example, in the "Lost note of smuggling" which he quotes, he brings forward several cases of dispute between the foreign customs and the Merchants as to the powers of the former, which courses on its first establishment; most of which were not acts of smuggling at all in the ordinary acceptation of the term, but disputes openly carried on He omits to say that some of these cases were decided by Consular Courts against the Customs, but dwells them all forward in order to blacken the reputation of the foreign Merchants, again to make the protest of the foreign members against employing "lawless foreigners" in the customs, which epithet, as is manifest from the context, applies to the men in the armed cruisers in the Canton river. Mr Lay gives a list of the Commissioners at each port and professes to believe that they were referred to. The allegation that in 1854, a leading British and Imperial American Firm were in part ownership with the Chinese Superintendent of Customs, had no better foundation than Mr Lay's fancy however, this document was not addressed to this Chamber, and it is needless for me to go through the tissue of misrepresentations contained in it. I have only referred to one or two points to show its animus, and this is so transparent that it should hardly have much weight with those for whom it was written, but we may do well to remember that we are subject to the despotism of the Chinese Customs, having only for redress to rely on what prove to be practically the most inefficient safeguards, and that it is conducted by one who seems to think that the end justifies any means in advancing his own views.

RESOLUTION 1ST —The accounts for the past year, showing a balance in hand of Tls. 2,251.55, were laid on the table and unanimously passed on the proposition of Mr Johnson, seconded by Mr. W. Thorburn.

The Committee for the ensuing year were then balloted for and the following gentlemen were elected:—

Messrs F. B. JOHNSON,
E. WEBB,
KEWICK,
ANTROBUS,
W. THORBURN,

J. KAIN,

2 D —The following new members of the Chamber were then unanimously elected, viz: Messrs. Oliphant & Co proposed by Mr. W Thorburn and seconded by Mr. Thorne

3RD. Messrs J. Foster & Co. proposed by Mr. H.C. Antrobus seconded by Mr. R. R. Westall.

Mr Thorne then rose to propose the following resolution which was seconded by Mr. Johnson and carried unanimously.

SHANGHAI, July 15th, 1863.

5TH.—Mr. Michie rose to ask the Chairman whether any reply had been received to the Chamber's letter to Sir F. Bruce on the subject of the Nanzing duties

The Chairman informed the meeting that in answer to communications addressed to H. M consul, the committee had received the following, which had been already published

No. 154. BRITISH CONSULATE.
SHANGHAI, 16th March, 1863.

SIR,—I have lately been asked by more than one Merchant to explain before I leave what prospect there is of eventual recovery of sums the Chinese Government for the exactions illegally levied on Silk at Nanzing and what the present position of the question is, and as I wish that all who have lodged a record of such claims at this office should be aware of what has been so far done in the matter, but have no means of communicating publicly with them save through your Chamber, I beg you will allow me to request your intervention in order to convey the required information to all concerned My representation of the case to H. M's Plenipotentiary resulted in June last in his declaring the exactions illegal, and authorizing me to deduct the amounts from the first duties payable by the claimants, and I accordingly called upon the Superintendent of Customs to carry out the order, but he declared his inability to do so, not having received correspondence instructions from his superiors Finding it impossible to secure his compliance by having recourse to the reasonable measures I am warranted to adopt in such cases I reported his refusal to H. M's Legation in August since which date I have had no further advices.

Obediently,
W H MEDHURST,
H. B M's Consul.

The Chairman of the British Chamber of Commerce, Shanghai.

The Chairman then addressed another letter to H M Consul requesting him to represent the matter again to Sir F Bruce, and in answer to this, Mr consul Medhurst replied on the 17th March that he had that day done so. This was how the matter stood at present, awaiting Sir Bruce's reply

Mr Michie then proposed "That as no reply has been received by the Chamber to the communications made through H B. M Consul to Sir F. Bruce in March last, on the subject of Nanzing duties illegally levied in 1864, a further representation on the subject be made by the Chamber to Sir F. Bruce urging an early settlement of the question

This was seconded by Mr. James Dow, and passed unanimously.

Mr Antrobus laid on the table plans and testimonials connected with a patent apparatus for raising sunken vessels and hauling ships off shore by Mr P. Dall C.E.

After a vote of thanks to the Chairman, the meeting separated.

EDWARD WEBB,
Chairman.

SHANGHAI VOLUNTEER CORPS.

A General Meeting of the above Corps took place on Saturday last at the Main Guard. There was a numerous attendance. R.C. Antrobus, Esq., Commanding Officer, in the Chair.

The Chairman addressed the meeting as follows:—

Before proceeding to the special business for which you have been called together, allow me in the first place to offer you my most sincere thanks for the honor you have conferred upon me, and the confidence you have shown in appointing me to the command of the Corps—a position the duties of which I undertake with much pleasure, fear I am but very imperfectly acquainted with them at present, but as there are no great mysteries to be overcome, I hope by application to satisfy all legitimate expectations on this head.

I fear the present position of the corps, both as regards the number of names on the Muster Roll and of attendants at the late parades, does not offer much cause for self congratulation, and during the hot season it has been considered expedient to defer all active measures until the Autumn, in the hope of coming out with renewed vigor in October. In the meantime I have to call on you for your earnest co-operation in securing recruits for the Corps, so that if on recommencing our labors we fall in earnestness and sustained efficiency, it cannot at all events be attributed to a deficiency of numbers, but to a want of zeal which I trust may not be made manifest. I have myself already secured several recruits whose personal accession to the Corps is a matter of congratulation, and who will no doubt indirectly attract a further number. In a community of the size of Shanghai we ought certainly to muster on our roll between 200 and 300 names, and never to have present on Parade a smaller number than 150. It is hardly necessary to point out the advantages of the Volunteer System in all places, but if there is one where above others a Corps should be not only a matter of pride to its own members, but a source of security to the particular locality, it is here, situated as we are in the midst of an enormous Native population, and with only a temporary garrison now being very considerably reduced. I am of opinion that we stand more chance of permanent success now than has before been the case, for on former occasions the Volunteers Corps has been hastily called out to meet a temporary emergency. The necessity of self defence as well as the novelty of the occupation, and the prospect of some active service have called forth numbers for the time, but so soon as the first cause has vanished, and public tranquility has been restored, their temporary zeal has evaporated, and attendance at parade has rapidly fallen off, whilst at present there being no momentary excitement, we may expect all recruits to be men of "sterner stuff," joining with a full determination to carry out to its conclusion the work which they undertake to perform. I shall always endeavour so to direct the work of the Corps that, combined with the necessary efficiency, it may offer as far as possible the attraction of a pleasant occupation, and I trust that on our next meeting we may have legitimate cause to congratulate ourselves on renewed strength, zeal and efficiency.

I have much pleasure in reading to the meeting a letter from Capt. Baker of H. M's 67th Regiment to the Honorary Secretary, presenting on the part of that Regiment, the Staff, Royal Engineers, Royal Artillery and Beloochees, a sum of $218 to be expended in the purchase of a Garrison Cup, to be shot for at our next rifle meeting.

Our hearty thanks are due to the Garrison for this handsome prize, and I know that I am carrying out the wish of every member present in requesting the Honorary Secretary officially to tender on our behalf our thanks for the same.

I had almost forgotten the other division of the Corps: viz., the Mounted Rangers, of whom I am glad to see several present. They belong to a Corps equally distinguished for the brilliancy of its uniform, the rapidity of its movements, and, Report says for its good dinners. I am sorry to hear that their ranks have been thinned, and I trust that as soon as the Rifle Corps is thoroughly resuscitated, the ranks of the Rangers will also be filled up.

The meeting then proceeded to elect a Captain in the place of Captain Turner, resigned.

Lieutenant Thorne was elected to fill the vacancy by a large majority.

Corporal Maclean was elected to fill the post of Lieutenant, in the room of Captain Thorne.

Private Gilmour, late Captain of the Custom House Corps was unanimously elected to the post of Ensign.

Lieut. Markham (Rangers) then proposed a vote of thanks to the Chairman, and hoped that the Rangers would ere long be able to send him a card of invitation to one of the dinners to which he had alluded.

The proceedings then terminated.

TREATY WITH THE KING OF BURMAH.

On the 10th day of November 1862, answering to the 5th day of the waning moon Tatshoungmon 1224, Lieut. Colonel A. P. Phayre, Chief Commissioner of British Burmah, having been duly empowered by His Excellency the Right Honorable the Earl of Elgin and Kincardine, K.T., and G.C.S., Viceroy and Governor General of India, and Woongyee Thado Mengyee Maha Menghla-thee-ha-thoo having been duly empowered by His Majesty the King of Burmah, concluded the following Treaty:—

Article 1.—The Burmese and British rulers have for a long time remained at peace and friendship; peace shall now be extended to future generations, both parties being careful to observe the conditions of a firm and lasting friendship.

Article 2.—In accordance with the great friendship existing between the two countries, traders and other subjects of the Burmese Government who may travel and trade in the British Territory, shall, in conformity with the custom of great countries, be treated and protected in the same manner as if they were subjects of the British Government.

Article 3.—Traders and other subjects of the British Government who may travel and trade in the Burmese Territory shall, in accordance with the custom of great countries, be treated and protected in the same manner as if they were subjects of the Burmese Government.

Article 4.—When goods are imported into Rangoon from any British or Foreign Territory, and declared to be for export by the Irrawaddy River to the Burmese Territory, the English ruler shall, provided bulk is not broken, and he believes the Manifest to be true, charge one per cent on their value, and, if he so desires, shall allow them to be conveyed under the charge of an officer until arrival at Maloon and Menhla. The tariff value of goods shall be forwarded yearly to the Burmese ruler. If such goods are declared for export to other Territories, and not for sale in the Burmese Territories, the Burmese ruler shall, if he believes the Manifest to be true, not cause bulk to be broken, and such goods shall be free of duty.

Article 5.—When goods are imported into Burmah by persons residing in the Burmese or any Foreign Territory, and declared to be for export by the Irrawaddy River to Rangoon, the Burmese Ruler shall, provided bulk is not broken, and he believes the Manifest to be true, charge one per cent on their value, if he so desires, shall allow them to be conveyed under the charge of an officer to Thayet Myo, and the tariff value of of such goods shall be forwarded yearly to the British ruler. If such goods are declared for export to other Territories, and not for sale in British territory, such goods shall be free according to the Customs Schedule, but goods liable to sea-board duty will pay the usual rate.

Article 6.—Traders from the Burmese Territory, either by land or by water, through the whole course of the Irrawaddy river, shall conform to the customs of the British territory, and be allowed to travel in such manner as they please without hindrance from the British ruler, and to purchase whatever they may require. Burmese Merchants will be allowed to settle and to have lands for the erection of houses of business in any part of the British territory.

Article 7.—Traders from the British Territory who may desire to travel in the Burmese Territory, either by land or by water, through the whole extent of the Irrawaddy River, shall conform to the customs of the Burmese Territory, and shall be allowed to travel in such manner as they please without hindrance by the Burmese Ruler, and to purchase whatever they may require. British Merchants will be allowed to settle and to have lands for the erection of houses of business in any part of the Burmese Territory

Article 8.—Should the British Ruler, within one year after the conclusion of this Treaty, abolish the duties now taken at Thayet and Toungoo, the Burmese Ruler, with a regard to the benefit of the people of his country, will, if so inclined, after one, two, three, or four years, abolish the duties now taken at Maloon and Toungoo [in the Burmese Territory.]

Article 9.—People from whatever country or nation who may wish to proceed to the British Territory, the Burmese Ruler shall allow to pass without hindrance. People from whatever country who may desire to proceed to the Burmese Territory, the British Ruler shall allow to pass without hindrance.

Ratified by His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General in Council on the 15th December, 1863.

Schedules of Customs Duties to be charged on goods imported into or exported from the Burmese Territory from or to the Sea-board, other than goods entering or passing under Articles 4 and 5 of the Treaty with the Viceroy of India, dated the 13th December 1862.

Import Tariff:—Goods brought by sea from the Western Countries such as—Cloths and piece goods, Glass Ware, Earthen Ware, Crockery, Medicines, Provisions and all other articles, will pay an ad valorem duty of 10 per cent.

Export Tariff.—Goods such as those entered below, exported from any part of the Burmese Territory, will pay an Export duty of six per cent, ad valorem. Timber, Planks, Stick-Lac, Ivory, Wax, Arsenic, Copper, Raw Silk, &c.

There is strange news from Burmah. The Burmese new year is expected to bring with it unusual events, and so, contemporaneously with great activity on the part of the anti-English party in Mandalay, just as in Japan, the King's second son takes refuge in Rangoon. This prince, named Thong-zementhni, though twenty-two years of age and lately married to his niece according to Burmese custom, was kept like all the royal family in strict seclusion. Whether chafing under this, or excited by the treaty and the new ideas it has originated, to advance progress a little more speedily, he rose with several followers in rebellion, then fled to a town of which his uncle is governor, and finally astonished Captain Lloyd, the Deputy Commissioner of Toughoo, by delivering himself up. Captain Lloyd told him he was free to go where he pleased so long as he kept the peace, and he his now in Rangoon and threatens to go on to Calcutta. The Deputy Commissioner gave the same reply to a party of horsemen who pursued him. The penalty of the Prince's return to Mandalay, after flight, is death. We wait for an explanation of this event which, it is to be hoped, will not embroil us with the Burmese, nor lead them to pause in their progress towards free trade and intercourse with us. The present King of Mandalay obtained power by dethroning his imbecile brother in 1852, who again had usurped the place of King Tharawaddy, his insane father. Whether there is any connexion between the Treaty and the Prince's flight, or whether the dispute is merely one as to the succession to the throne, remains to be seen.

The truth has come out regarding the Prince of Thongzai, who fled from Mandalay to Rangoon. He declares that he was unable to tolerate the cruelty of his uncle and that he will not return. His presence put our authorities in a very delicate position with the King of Burmah, from which they have been relieved by the Prince's removal to the independent Shan States. There he will find other royal fugitives, and as his followers, one of whom is said to be a man of ability, are eager for him to seize the Burmese throne, we may expect some action from that quarter.
